

Update from the Cosmic Frontier: Construction of the ISS and the Future of Planetary Exploration
Robby R. Landis
Jet Propulsion Laboratory, California Institute of Technology

The initial construction and occupation by astronauts of the International Space Station (ISS) represents the beginning of one of the most significant chapters in the story of human space exploration. This presentation provides an overview of upcoming ISS expeditions and assembly missions as well as glimpse at the future robotic missions to Mars to the Cassini mission to Saturn.